 - What do they want?
- The conversation

What comes up for you when you think about negotiation?

What is Negotiation?

Negotiation describes any communication process between individuals that is intended to reach a compromise or agreement to the satisfaction of both parties.

~ Negotiation Law and Legal Definition | U.S. Legal

Why is job offer
negotiation important?

What You Could Lose

Someone who negotiated their salary up from $40,000 to $45,000 and enjoyed an annualized rate of growth of 5 percent over a 45-year career would earn about $750,000 more during their lifetime than if they'd stuck with that first offer ~ Zip Recruiter

What You Could Gain

“It is very unlikely negotiating will lead to an offer disappearing. Most employers say that when a candidate negotiates, it conveys confidence in their own abilities and in their sense of worth.”

~ Julia Pollak, ZipRecruiter’s Labor Economist.

How to Succeed in Negotiation

Preparation is everything.

Preparation

Know what you want and why you want it.

What really matters to you?

Know what you're worth and what value
you bring.

Know what they want.

What do you still need to know?

What Do You Want?

- What outcomes do you want?
- Why are they important, to you?

What really matters to you?

- This is the reason your negotiation is important.
- This part is key to your success.

What is Your Value?

- This is about YOU.
- What makes your value unique?
- How can you contribute?
- How can you demonstrate this?

What Do They Want?

- Consider the other side.
- What's important to them?
- Why does it matter?
- How can you fill this need?

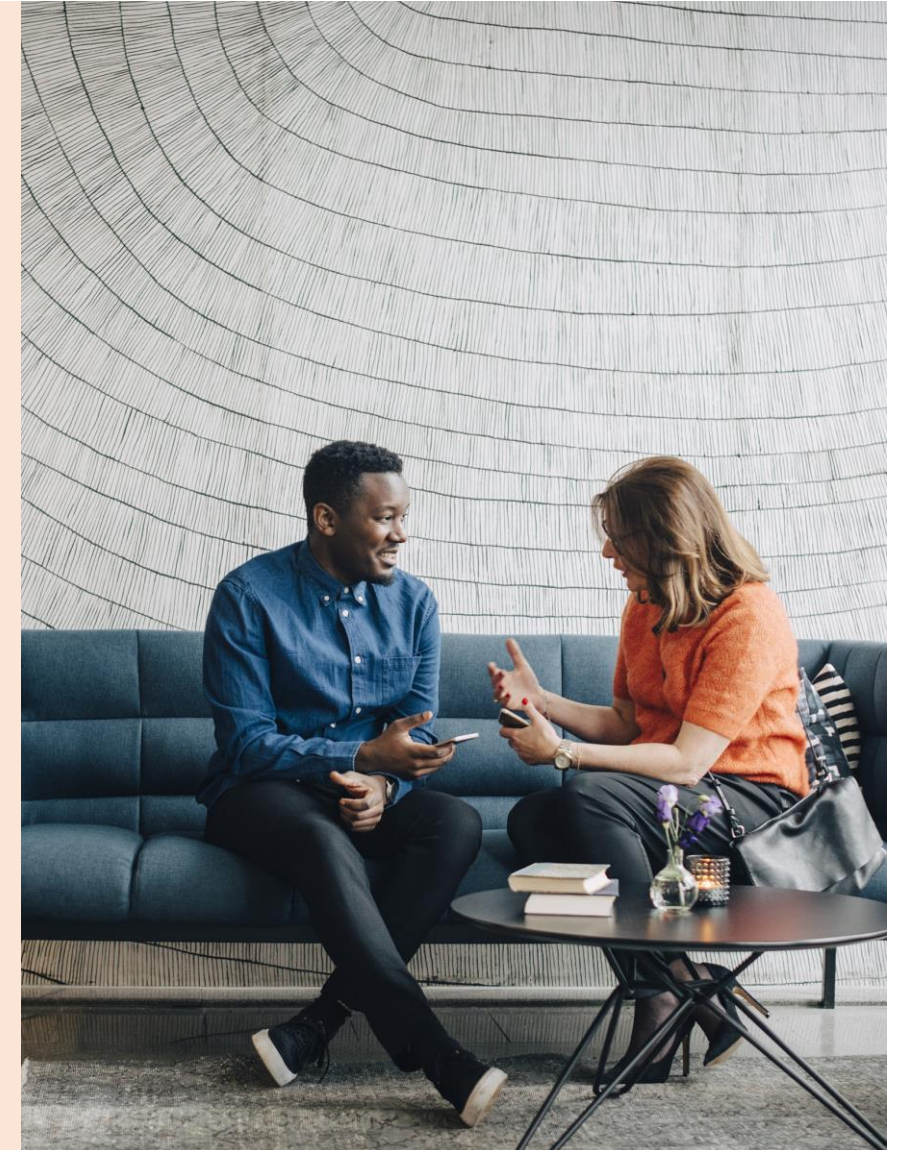

The Conversation

- Inquiry
- Listening
- Advocacy

Let's Practice!

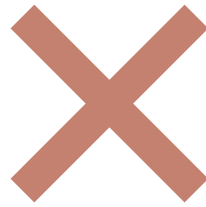

- Take turns with a partner
- Candidate: present your asks
- Employer: present your side
- Discuss
- Conclude conversation with next steps

Debrief

What worked best?

What didn't work?

What will you try in your own negotiation that you haven't tried before?
